PSA Competition Detail

What happens to images you submit to Photographic Society of America (PSA) competitions?

1. You submit your image(s). Using the APS website you upload images from your computer, or load them from your image library, into the open PSA competition.

2. APS members who are trained as judges are asked to select the images to go forward to PSA. If the judges have images submitted they are dropped from the selection committee and an APS Board member, who has not submitted images, is asked to take their place.

3. Though you may submit multiple images, only one of your images may go on to PSA.

4. We send our images to an administrator for PSA who collects the images from all of the clubs in our PSA Group. These images are given to a club in a different Group to judge. This club may be located anywhere in the world.

5. We compete as a club, and are ranked as a club within our Group. But it is individual images which receive a ribbon from PSA.
